

CLOSING THE WOMEN'S WEALTH GAP

A national initiative to advance policies and strategies that build wealth for low-wealth women and women of color

In recent years, a national discussion about the causes and effects of inequality has played out in our communities, the media, the presidential race and the halls of Congress. The issue is often framed in terms of growing income and wealth gaps, but the conversation about solutions typically focuses on income—connecting people to job opportunities, raising wages, expanding access to education and skills training and other approaches. The discussion about inequality has significant implications for women; yet a focus on income alone leaves out a key part of the story.

“In discussing the financial standing of women in America, a focus on income is misleading because wealth is a much more meaningful measure of economic well-being.”

- Mariko Chang, Author/Shortchanged¹

Today, the gender wealth gap is far greater than the income gap: median wealth for single men is $10,150, but for single women it is only $3,210. Wealth owned by women of color is even more limited: median wealth for single Black women is $200 and $100 for single Hispanic women.²

Income is central to the ability of women and their families to get by day-to-day, but building their long-term economic security requires access to income and wealth-building opportunities. For example, women need access to financial education and coaching coupled with affordable and appropriate savings and credit-building products. They need to be able to save for emergencies, higher education and a secure retirement; and they need opportunities to leverage savings into wealth-building opportunities through investments in stocks, bonds, homes, real estate and businesses.

Maximizing opportunities for women to build financial assets will benefit their families, communities and the national economy as they will be more able to survive temporary economic disruptions, to invest in their future, and to pass resources on to future generations. But today, women face a host of barriers to building wealth.

“Men are more likely to get early opportunities to save by working for employers who offer pensions or retirement savings plans and are also more likely to receive stock options.

Both of these contribute to wealth directly.

Women are nearly twice as likely as men to work part-time, and nine times as many women as men reported working part-time because of family care reasons.”

- Heidi Hartmann, President, Institute for Women’s Policy Research⁵

They are less likely to have jobs that offer employer-based retirement and health benefits or to have access to tax subsidies that incentivize savings and investment. They are more likely to be caring for children or elderly parents, which limits their capacity to work and save, and to be carrying high levels of student debt, which restricts their ability to build a nest egg for emergencies or to invest in homes or businesses.⁶

Fortunately, these wealth-building barriers can be addressed through practical and policy solutions, many of which are already in place in different parts of the country or in other countries. Yet, until now, there has been no national forum for stakeholders to come together, discuss the causes and effects of the gap, and identify policy and practical solutions.

The Closing the Women’s Wealth Gap Initiative is creating a space for advocates, organizers, researchers, practitioners, and funders to work towards solutions that build wealth for low-income women and women of color. Heather McCulloch is the director of the initiative, which is supported by the Friedman Family Foundation, JPMorgan Chase & Co. and the Walter and Elise Haas Fund. Advisors include Angela Glover Blackwell of PolicyLink, author Mariko Chang, Elena Chavez Quezada of the Walter and Elise Haas Fund, Noreen Farrell of Equal Rights Advocates, Surina Khan of the Women’s Foundation of California and Kilolo Kijakazi of The Urban Institute.
